

THE FUNGI OF SOUTH WEST PAKISTAN. PART I

SHAKIL AHMAD KHAN and M. KAMAL

Agriculture Research Institute, Tandojam, West Pakistan

(Received August 2, 1967; revised October 18, 1967)

The knowledge of the host range and distribution of parasitic fungi in a particular region is of great utility in plant pathological investigations.

West Pakistan formed a part of British India up to 1947 and its fungal flora has been listed by Butler and Bisby³ and Mundkur.²³ Ahmad¹ issued the first monograph on the mycoflora of West Pakistan but this excluded the areas included in South-West Pakistan, viz. the former province of Sind.

The only published report on the occurrence of fungal plant diseases in the former province of Sind, as far as known to the writers, is given by Uppal, Patol and Kamat²⁶ who listed 18 species in their Fungi of Bombay as Sind formed a part of Bombay Presidency till April 1936. The total species of fungi were, however, not more than 25 from this part, an area of over 61,200 square miles.

Systematic studies were therefore undertaken to identify the fungal flora, mainly parasitic, and in the work being presented here 212 species of fungi belonging to 68 genera and collected from 188 host plants are being reported from this region.

Sind or Sindh derives its name from "Sindhu" which means a collection of waters. This tract of land is about 360 miles long and 170 broad. It lies between 28° 30' and 23° 35' North latitude and 66° 42' and 71° 10' East longitude. It is bounded by the Thar desert in the east, the Arabian Sea and Rann of Kutch in the south, the great plain of Punjab in the north and in the west lie the Khirthar ranges. Thus it could be divided into three parts: (1) Sind proper, the alluvial plain through which the Indus flows, (2) the Kohistan or hilly country, extending between Karachi and Sehwan and rising northwards to the Khirthar range and (3) the Thar desert, spreading eastwards from the Nara river into Rajputana.

The climate of Sind is of the sub-tropical desert type with hot and dry weather prevailing for over 7 to 8 months. It is the driest and hottest of all the regions in Pakistan or India. Summer temperatures frequently rise to 114-116° F, but the average is 90° F. Winters are usually mild and the average temperature is 60°F. The rainfall is scanty and variable, hardly 5 inches annually. Other peculiarities of the region are the sand-hills, longitudinal bights and transverse ridges, and the salt lakes which are frequently met in the desert. Winds are usually strong for most part of the year specially in the southern zone. All these climatic and physiographic features exert great influence on the phanerogamic flora which are the hosts of the fungi reported in this work.

The writers are aware that the present list of collections is, no doubt, meagre and represents only the beginning of the work, but this list of collections is being presented so that it may meet the needs of the university students and other phytopathologists working in different parts of Pakistan.

The identity of the collections given below has been confirmed through the help given by the staff of the Commonwealth Mycological Institute, Kew, England. A Phytopathological Herbarium has also been set up at Tandojam for reference.

The writers wish to place on record the valuable help received from various specialists in connection with this work, viz. Dr. G. C. Ainsworth, Messrs. F. C. Deighton, K. Pirozynski, G. F. Laundon, B. C. Sutton, Miss G. M. Waterhouse, Drs. M. B. Ellis, J. E. Mordue and C. Booth of the C.M.I., Kew, England, Professor G. B. Cummins of the Purdue University, Indiana, and Charles Chupp, Professor Emeritus of the Cornell University, New York, U.S.A. Thanks are also due to Drs. Asghar Jalil, Khushnood Ahmad Siddiqui, S. M. H. Jafri and E. Nasir for the help given in connection with the identification of the host plants.
